When ShearCore was still just an idea, we knew there was a non-negotiable point in the business plan. We had to have Ross Christenson. His reputation for sophisticated, yet simple designs, decades of experience and logical, innovative engineering are things we couldn’t do without.

With Ross on board, and a clean slate, ShearCore is now manufacturing Fortress—a shear that is sophisticated, structurally sound and has a reduced number of parts due to its innovative design.

3 Year Unlimited Hour Structural Warranty

- 100% of the structure is made of SSAB steel
- Top quality rotation components were selected and are rated for full machine pressure to insure reliability
- Nitrocarburized swivel components for durability
- Piston rotation motor is standard and the machine is center line balanced which eliminates drift
- Massive pivot group eliminates the need for auto-guide (puck) and gives it a longer life and better cutting
- Patented boot with removable side plate that covers the entire tip and doubles the size of the protected area on the guide side of the upper jaw
- Taller blades allow for more parent material, resulting in a stronger jaw
- Upper and lower jaws are made from 6" plate steel which eliminates the need for lamination
- Designed with maintenance in mind—large access panels are removable for component replacement
- Improved visibility
- Elimination of hose inlets and the addition of a contoured reinforcement around the swing bearing to strengthen the body

Ross Christenson
Lead Designer
When it comes to manufacturing mobile shears, nothing matters more than experience, and no one has more than Jim Campbell. When you combine Jim’s knowledge and passion with state of the art machining centers, a new factory and a hand picked crew of welders, machinists and assemblers, you have the best the industry can offer. This is Fortress.

Designed for manufacturability, using state of the art machining centers, and having the best manufacturing team in the industry ensures that Fortress is truly manufactured with excellence.
